

PR 5338

. C7

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

The Border Edition

OF THE

WAVERLEY NOVELS

EDITED WITH

INTRODUCTORY ESSAYS AND NOTES

BY

ANDREW LANGSupplementing those of the Author.With Two Hundred and Fifty New and Original Illustrations by Eminent Artists.*

BY the kind permission of the Hon. Mrs. MAXWELL-SCOTT, of Abbotsford, the great-granddaughter of Sir WALTER, the MSS. and other material at Abbotsford were examined by Mr. ANDREW LANG during the preparation of his Introductory Essays and Notes to the Series, so that the BORDER EDITION may be said to contain all the results of the latest researches as to the composition of the Waverley Novels.

Complete in Twenty-four Volumes. Crown 8vo, tastefully bound in green cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d. each.

In special cloth bindings, flat backs, gilt tops. Supplied in Sets only of 24 volumes. Price £4 4s.

Also an edition with all the 250 original etchings. In 24 volumes. Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

SOME ARTISTS AND ETCHERS*Contributing to the "Border Edition"*

Sir J. E. MILLAIS, Bart., P.R.A.

Sir JAMES D. LINCOLN, P.R.I.

JOHN PETTIE, R.A.

LOCKHART BOGLE.

GORDON BROWNE.

D. V. CAMERON.

FRANK DADD, R.I.

R. DE LOS RIOS.

HERBERT DICKSEE.

M. L. GOW, R.I.

W. B. HOLE, R.S.A.

AD. LALAUZE.

Sir HENRY RAEBURN, R.A., P.R.S.A.

W. Q. ORCHARDSON, R.A.

R. W. MACBETH, A.R.A.

J. MACWHIRTER, A.R.A., R.S.A.

JULIEN LE BLANT.

W. E. LOCKHART, R.S.A.

H. MACBETH-RAEBURN.

JAMES ORROCK, R.I.

WALTER PAGET.

Sir GEORGE REID, P.R.S.A.

FRANK SHORT.

W. STRANG.

Sir Walter Scott's Poetical Works. Globe Edition. Edited by F. T. Palgrave. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d. Also in Special Binding for Prizes. 3s. 6d.

Lockhart's Life of Scott. In five vols. 8vo. 3s. 6d. net each. (Library of English Classics.)

Sir Walter Scott. By Richard H. Hutton. Cr. 8vo. Library Edition. 2s. net. Popular Edition. 1s. 6d. Sewed 1s. (English Men of Letters Series.)

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD., LONDON.

"THE BOOKMAN" BIOGRAPHIES.

A Series of Popular Illustrated Monographs on Great Writers.

With a Special Half-Tone Photogravure Frontispiece, and a wealth of excellent illustrations.

Price 1s. net each volume (postage 2d.).

1. Thomas Carlyle.

By G. K. CHESTERTON and
J. E. HODDER WILLIAMS.

[Ready.]

2. Robert Louis Stevenson.

By W. ROBERTSON NICOLL,
G. K. CHESTERTON, etc.

[Ready.]

3. Charles Dickens.

By G. K. CHESTERTON,
F. G. KITON, and
J. E. HODDER WILLIAMS.

[Ready.]

4. Leo Tolstoy.

By G. K. CHESTERTON,
G. H. PERRIS, etc.

[Ready.]

5. Sir Walter Scott.

By W. S. CROCKETT,
JAMES L. CAW,
J. E. HODDER WILLIAMS.

[October.]

6. Alfred Tennyson.

By G. K. CHESTERTON,
Dr. RICHARD GARNETT, C.B.

[October.]

7. Robert Browning.

By JAMES DOUGLAS,
J. E. HODDER WILLIAMS.

[November.]

8. W. M. Thackeray.

By G. K. CHESTERTON,
LEWIS MELVILLE.

[November.]

EXTRACTS FROM PRESS NOTICES.

"Providing as they do brief, vivid and instructive impressions of men in whom everybody is interested, these little books are sure to be widely sought for."—The Scotsman.

"The Bookman Biographies should be a great success. The books are very fully illustrated with excellent reproductions."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton have had the happy idea of re-issuing some of the literary biographies and criticisms which have appeared from time to time in the 'Bookman.' The series should become popular."—Daily Mail.

"Comprises a vast amount of biography, criticism and pictorial illustration in a remarkable small compass."—St. James' Gazette.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

SIR WALTER SCOTT

FROM A PAINTING BY JOHN GRAHAM GILBERT

SIR WALTER SCOTT

BY

W. S. CROCKETT

AND

JAMES L. CAW

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS

THE LIFE OF SIR WALTER SCOTT

LONDON
HODDER AND STOUGHTON
27, PATERNOSTER ROW

1903

PRINTED BY HAZELL, WATSON AND VINLY, LTD.,
LONDON AND AYLESBURY.

THE NEW YORK
PUBLIC LIBRARY

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAGE
SIR WALTER SCOTT	Frontispiece
A MINIATURE OF SIR WALTER SCOTT	1
SIR WALTER SCOTT'S GREAT-GRANDFATHER, "BEARDIE"	2
SIR WALTER SCOTT'S MOTHER	3
COLLEGE WYND, EDINBURGH (Birthplace of Sir Walter Scott)	4
A PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT (by James Saxon, 1805)	5
SIR WALTER SCOTT'S FATHER	6
A PORTRAIT OF LADY SCOTT (CHARLOTTE MARGARET CARPENTER)	7
NO. 25, GEORGE SQUARE, EDINBURGH	8
SANDYKNOWE TOWER	9
THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, KELSO	10
WAVERLEY LODGE, KELSO	10
FULL-LENGTH PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Sir Henry Raeburn, 1808)	11
LASSWADE COTTAGE	12
OLD SHERIFF COURT HOUSE, SELKIRK	13
NO. 39, CASTLE STREET, EDINBURGH	13
ASHESTIEL (from a drawing by J. M. W. Turner, R.A.)	14
A PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Joseph Slater)	15
SIR WALTER SCOTT (by John Graham Gilbert, 1829)	16
SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Sir J. Watson Gordon, R.A.)	16
ABBOTSFORD AND THE EILDON HILLS	17
LOCH KATRINE	18
MELROSE ABBEY	18

	PAGE
THE CHANTREY BEST OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, 1820	19
SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Sir Thomas Lawrence)	20
RHYMER'S GLEN	20
FINDING THE MS. OF "WAVERLEY"	21
SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Sir David Wilkie, R.A.)	22
SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Andrew Geddes, A.R.A., 1818)	23
SIR WALTER SCOTT (from a painting by C. R. Leslie, R.A., 1824)	24
SIR WALTER SCOTT (from a painting by G. S. Newton, R.A.)	24
SIR WALTER SCOTT (painted for Mr. Murray by Thomas Phillips, R.A., 1818)	25
JOHN GIBSON LOCKHART, SON-IN-LAW AND BIOGRAPHER OF SIR WALTER SCOTT	25
CHIEFSWOOD COTTAGE	26
A PORTRAIT OF MRS. J. G. LOCKHART	27
"THE ABBOTSFORD FAMILY" (by Sir David Wilkie, R.A.)	28
A PORTRAIT OF SCOTT (by Knight, 1826)	29
ABBOTSFORD FROM THE SOUTH-WEST	30
THE ENTRANCE HALL AT ABBOTSFORD	30
SIR WALTER SCOTT AND HIS FRIENDS (from a painting by Thomas Faed, R.A.)	31
THE OLD TOLBOOTH DOOR AT ABBOTSFORD	32
SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Sir William Allan, R.A., 1832)	32
THE LIBRARY AT ABBOTSFORD	33
THE STUDY AT ABBOTSFORD	33
SIR WALTER SCOTT IN HIS STUDY (from a painting by Sir William Allan, R.A.)	34
SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Sir John Watson Gordon, R.A., 1830)	35
SIR WALTER SCOTT'S TOMB IN DRYBURGH ABBEY	36
DRYBURGH ABBEY	36
A PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT (by Sir Edwin Landseer, R.A., 1834)	37
THE SCOTT MONUMENT AT EDINBURGH, WITH A VIEW OF THE CASTLE IN THE BACKGROUND	38

SIR WALTER SCOTT :

SOME OF HIS HOMES AND HAUNTS.

A MINIATURE OF
SIR WALTER SCOTT
In the Scottish National Portrait
Gallery

MELROSE Railway Station in "the season" is proof enough that Scott and his Country are not forgotten. Each summer sees an ever-increasing influx of visitors from all quarters to the "land of the mountain and the flood." And so far as the foreign element is concerned, the palm for popularity must be given to the shrines of Sir Walter. In the States and Canada Scott is said to be even better known than he is in Scotland. The story of his homes and haunts prints itself more deeply, perhaps, on the heart and imagination of the average American than the average Scot. That is scarcely as it should be: still, one is not surprised. No one disputes Scott's kingship among the English-speaking races, and, doubtless, the old "nearer-to-kirk" adage applies with tolerable truth to those who live within easy reach, or, indeed, within the romantic circle itself of the Scott Country. But there is a reviving interest in Scott in his own localities and amongst his own countrymen. The modern Scottish School has not outstripped the old - is far from outstripping it. Stevenson may be reckoned a good second to Scott, but per longo intervallo. And of other representatives (a company by no means to be despised) what is the verdict, however? That they have but increased our hunger, forcing us back to the great Master, always Romancist-in-Chief. One is glad, too, to find a growing tide in favour of Scott as a school classic. Thanks to the excellent editions recently produced for this purpose, there is no reason why every Scottish

SIR
WALTER SCOTT'S
GREAT-GRANDFATHER,
"BEARDIE"

(Reproduced from
Lockhart's "Life of Scott,"
by kind permission of Messrs. A. & C. Black)

schoolboy and girl should not succumb to the pure and wholesome sway of Sir Walter Scott. With profit, also, might the schools devote some part of their annual holiday to his Country, and study on the spot that strong local environment which, in large measure, made him the man he was, and the force in British Literature he must still hold, notwithstanding the enormous fictional output of the period.

It will be seventy-one years this autumn (1903) since Scott passed "from sunshine to the sunless land." But the sunny influence of his life has not passed. It has rather increased year by year. When the pen dropped from his palsied fingers that pathetic day in 1832, Scott's work was only just beginning. The nineteenth

SIR
WALTER SCOTT'S
MOTHER

(Reproduced from
Lockhart's "Life of Scott,"
by kind permission of
Messrs. A. & C. Black)

century saw the world at his feet in the most loving admiration. One is safe in saying that with "Marmion," and the "Lay"; "Guy Mannering," and "Old Mortality"; "The Bride of Lammermoor," and "Ivanhoe," more really pleasant hours have been spent than over any other series of romances in the home-tongue (or any tongue whatever), however happily conceived. A constant demand for the numerous new editions, and an abiding interest in all that pertains to Scott and the Scott Land, assure us that it will be long before the name of "Waverley" passes from the speech and page of the multitude, or the places associated with the Magician fail to stir the sympathy and inspire the devotion of the whole English-speaking world:

(Reproduced from an etching by D. V. Cameron in George G. Napier's
"The Homes and Haunts of Sir Walter Scott, Bart.," by kind permission of the author and of Messrs. James Maclehose & Sons)

Scott shall ne'er oblivion know;

While old Scotland lasts, his name,

Fitly framed for mutual fame,
Shall with hers still co-exist,
First in Honour's lofty list:
Till his land and race are not,
Glory be to Walter Scott!

The Border Country,
in its general characteristics, has altered little since Scott's day. In some other respects there has been a saddening and woeful change. Still do the "glittering and resolute streams of Tweed"

to use the Cromwellian's phrase—keep their old graceful way by the boskiest of banks and greenest of meadows.
The hills which Washington Irving declared to be "monotonous in their aspect, and so destitute of trees that one could almost see a stout fly walking along their profile," have undergone, in many instances, a magnificent metamorphosis. The rare woodland of Abbotsford is itself a sample of how many another landscape, once arid and ugly, has been transformed to "a thing of beauty and a joy for ever." Thirlestane, in the heart of Ettrickdale; Dawyck, by Drummelzier on the Tweed; the "noble Neidpath," despoiled by Wordsworth's "Degenerate Douglas"; Cowdenknowes, that true

home of beauty and song, with other delightful domains, all well known to Scott but covertless enough in his day, are now fully mantled in the glory of elm and oak, fir and beech, and rowan, intermingled with copses of hazel and laburnum, wild-rose and broom. Not, of course, that the country was a broad, bald stretch when the Wizard was casting his spell over it. Tweed was a "fair river" then also. And the beauty-spots of Scott's time abide the beauty-spots still. But the by-past century on the Border was emphatically a century of arboriculture, a revivifying of the time when the colloquial name for the region between the Ettrick and Tweed valleys was "the Forest," classic in history, and immortal in the sweet settings of Border minstrelsy. With Abbotsford, too, the neighbouring mansions, many of them, passed from their primitive shoot-ing-box condition into superb palatial residences. Railways have long interlaced the wide Border, and the most inaccessible hill hamlets of Scott's day are linked by the telegraph-line to all ends of the earth. But the vexing, almost heartrending, feature of present-day Border life is the tremendous depopulation of the outlying districts. The Border land question (the subject is hardly confined to the Border)

A PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY JAMES SAXON, 1805

SIR
WALTER SCOTT'S
FATHER

(Reproduced from
Lockhart's "Life of Scott,"
by kind permission of
Messrs. A. & C. Black)

is surely ripe for discussion. When is Government going to deal with it? And the settlement of the baneful "led-farm" system, that most aggravating curse of the Border parishes, unknown in any great degree to Scott, should be insisted upon from landlord and tenant alike. How deserted the glens of Ettrick and Yarrow, and Tweed and Teviot, since Scott was their most familiar figure! More than one-half of their peaceful, plodding populations have gone to swell the big local manufacturing centres, as Hawick and Galashiels, and the already overcrowded and over-garreted cities like Glasgow and Edinburgh. The spirit of Border rusticity, as Scott gloried to live amongst it, has been rudely disturbed,

A PORTRAIT
OF
LADY SCOTT (CHARLOTTE
MARGARET
CARPENTER)

(Reproduced from
Lockhart's "Life of Scott,"
by kind permission of
Messrs. A. & C. Black)

and a remedy might well be found against this continued decrease.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

When Walter Scott touched for the first time the land he was most of all to adorn, and which was to be identified with his name through the centuries, he was a child of barely three years—dull, lame, and thought to be dying. It was to Sandyknowe, his grandfather's farm at Smailholm, in Roxburghshire, he was sent to retrieve, if possible, his little life trembling in the balance. Here he lived, for the most part, until his eighth year, recovered his health, grew into a fine fair-haired boy, and, above all, caught, as no other did, the true spirit of the scenes amidst which he lived and moved. Had he remained in Edinburgh he would almost certainly have succumbed. It was the happy thought of Smailholm that saved him to his family and the world. But it did more. It gave the keynote to his future. It made a man of him in the best sense of the phrase. What the boy felt in that first consciousness at Smailholm never left him all through life. It was there that destiny began to work itself out. From the "honourable humility" of Robert Scott's "thatched mansion" he reached the topmost rung of the Scottish literary ladder, and he still stands, at the beginning of the new century, among Scotsmen "first in Honour's lofty list." The farmhouse of Sandyknowe has long given place to a more commodious dwelling. A small part of the original wall is said to be recognisable in the stable and cartshed of the modern steading. The true shrine, however, is not the farmhouse, but the grey old fortlet of Sandyknowe, strongly posted on its beetling crag, about a bowshot beyond. It is one of the best-preserved feudal relics in the south of Scotland, but, lying slightly off the beaten track, is unknown to a large circle of Scott students. The lines descriptive of it in the Introduction to Canto III. of "Marmion" are among the finest of Scott's word-pictures :

From a photo by John Patrick, Edinburgh

NO. 25, GEORGE SQUARE, EDINBURGH

The residence of Sir Walter Scott's parents shortly after his birth in 1771

It was a barren scene, and wild,
Where naked cliffs were rudely piled,

But ever and anon between Lay velvet tufts of loveliest green ;
 And well the lonely infant knew
 Recesses where the wall-flower grew,
 And honeysuckle loved to crawl
 Up the low crag and ruin'd wall.
 I deem'd such nooks the sweetest shade
 The sun in all its round survey'd ;
 And still I thought that shatter'd tower
 The mightiest work of human power ;
 And marvel'd as the aged hind
 With some strange tale bewitch'd my mind,
 Of forayers, who, with headlong force,

Down from that strength
 had spur'd their horse,
 Their southern rapine to renew,
 Far in the distant Cheviots
 blue,
 And, home returning, fill'd
 the hall
 With revel, wassel-rout,
 and brawl.

The whole building is suggestive of immense strength. The assaults of armed hosts and Time's corroding touches have left little difference upon it. Was ever scene so grand and fair ! That must be the reflection of all who have gazed from the summit of Sandyknowe on the majestic panorama spreading far and wide

From a drawing by J. M. W. Turner, R.A.

SANDYKNOWE TOWER

(Reproduced from Lockhart's "Life of Scott," by kind permission of Messrs. A. & C. Black)

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, KELSO

(Reproduced from W. S. Crockett's "The Scott Country," by kind permission of Messrs. A. & C. Black)

beauty, crowded with a thousand memories of the heroic and the romantic, the view from Sandyknowe should satisfy all lovers of the land of Scott. Close at hand are Mertoun's Halls — "fair c'en now" — the seat of Sandyknowe's laird, son of the reivers, but bearing,

WAVERLEY LODGE, KELSO

The residence of Miss Janet Scott

(Reproduced from W. S. Crockett's "The Scott Country," by kind permission of Messrs. A. & C. Black)

around it. Scott knew it well, and brought many of his friends in later years to get into raptures over it. His last visit was with Turner in the autumn of 1831, when the great artist sketched the place for a new edition of the Poems. As an amphitheatre of the most perfect beauty, crowded with a thousand memories of the heroic and the romantic, the view from Sandyknowe should satisfy all lovers of the land of Scott. Close at hand are Mertoun's Halls — "fair c'en now" — the seat of Sandyknowe's laird, son of the reivers, but bearing, too, in his veins the softer blood of Yarrow's gentle "Flower." A short distance to the west the Brethren Stanes shrine their tearful tragedy, whilst legends of the youthful Cuthbert, greatest of Border Saints, still linger by the haunts of his boyhood. Further over is

FULL LENGTH
PORTRAIT
OF
SIR WALTER SCOTT,
BY SIR HENRY RAEBURN,
1808

(Reproduced from
Lockhart's "Life of Scott,"
by kind permission of
Messrs A. & C. Black)

Bemersyde of the perennial Haigs, eternally fortified by the Rhymers couplet—

Tyde what may betyde, Haig shall be Haig of Bemersyde ;

and away yonder are Dryburgh, its white monks long laid to rest, and its bells long done ringing ; the Wizard-cleft Eildons ; Melrose, "like some tall rock with lichens grey" ; the storied vale of the Gala ; the Ettrick and Yarrow landmarks ; and in the distance the grassy peaks of Peeblesshire. On the south are the Dunion and Ruberslaw, Penielheugh and Lilliard's Edge, Carter Fell, and the long wavy outline of the Cheviots. To the north "the grim Black Hill of

LASSWADE COTTAGE

Scott's country home during the early years of his married life

(Reproduced from George G. Napier's "The Homes and Haunts of Sir Walter Scott, Bart.," by kind permission of the author and of Messrs. James Maclehose & Sons)

Cowden-
knowes" (red enough from this aspect, however) sentinels the Rhymers Ereildoune and the sweet pastoral haughs of the Leader. On the east rise the crags of Hume, with its dismantled Castle,

"stern guardian of the Merse," the Dirringtons, Covenant-haunted Duns Law, and the open-spreading, cultivated, and fertile valley of the Tweed. "Such," says Lockhart, "were the objects that had painted the earliest images on the eye of the last and greatest of the Border Minstrels."

More mighty spots may rise, more glaring shine,
But none unite in one attaching maze,
The brilliant, fair, and soft, the glories of old days.

Here, at Sandyknowe Tower, is the scene of Scott's first ballad, "The Eye of St. John," written, it was said, to avert its demolition. But that can scarcely be, remembering the exceeding strength of the structure, and the utter needlessness of what would have been an unpardonable vandalism. It has been suggested that Sandyknowe might be purchased and put in a better state of repair by some such body as the Edinburgh Border Counties Association, which has already done admirable work in that direction, having annexed the Tower of True Thomas at Earlston and John Leyden's Cottage at Denholm, and contemplating other commendable schemes. At any rate, the visitor to Sandyknowe will not depart disappointed. In its bold and rugged surroundings he may discover a wonderfully correct index to the determination and keen-spiritedness of the boy who gambolled by its base, and as a youth climbed to its highest bartizan, and—last scene of all—as a white-haired paralytic wept over the long-dead days as they came back to him here, fancying himself once more on the broomy knowes of Smailholm in the midst of the thunderstorm and lightning flashes, clapping his hands and crying in his ecstacy, “Bonnie! bonnie! dae’t again, dae’t again!”

OLD SHERIFF
COURT HOUSE,
SELKIRK

Where Sir Walter
Scott sat when Sheriff of Selkirkshire

*From a photo by
R. Clapperton,
Selkirk*

NO. 30, CASTLE
STREET,
EDINBURGH

Sir Walter Scott's
town residence
from 1793, shortly after his marriage, until 1829

*From a photo
by John Patrick, Edinburgh*

ASHESTIEL

*From a drawing
by J. M. W. Turner, R.A.*

Scott removed from Lasswade
to Ashiestiel in 1804,
and here wrote "The Lay
of the Last Minstrel,"
"Marmion," and
"The Lady of the Lake"

(Reproduced from Lockhart's "Life of Scott,"
by kind permission of
Messrs. A. & C. Black)

Kelso, where some of Scott's happy boyhood years were spent, is only six miles distant. He was a pupil in the old Grammar School, long demolished, close to Edie Ochiltree's prison—a vault in the Abbey which the blue-gown declared "wasna sae dooms bad a place as it was ca'd." Many of the houses where Scott was a frequent guest have disappeared, or, like Waverley Lodge, as his Kelso home is now called, have changed beyond recognition. At Kelso, Scott's Ballantyne comradeship began. Here he printed his first ballad-collection—a mere pamphlet, indeed. Then the first two volumes of the "Minstrelsy" issued from the Kelso press in a splendour of typography which evoked the highest admiration. We like to think of Scott's associations with this charming Tweedside town the "Queen of the Borders," and, as described by himself, "the most beautiful if not the most romantic village in Scotland." He had the kindest of friends at Kelso in his maiden Aunt Jenny, and indulgent sailor uncle at Rosebank. It was from Kelso, too, as a law-student on holiday, free for a time from the "dry and barren wilderness of forms and conveyances," that he sallied forth to Flodden, to Norham Castle, and Berwick, and as far south as Bamborough and Lindisfarne—all afterwards shrined in "Marmion," the greatest of his verse-romances. Round about Kelso, he would be quite at home at Ednam, the birthplace of the author of "The Seasons"; at Yetholm, the Gypsy Capital; at Jedburgh, Southdean, Crailing, and Ancrum—names of stirring note in Border history and romance.

A PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY JOSEPH SLATER

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY JOHN GRAHAM GILBERT, 1826

Scott married in 1797, settling down with the prim but pleasant, if not particularly pretty, mademoiselle with whom he fell in love, seemingly at first sight, among the Cumberland mountains. "By Eske's fair streams that run" they lived for six years a pleasantly simple life in the rustic cottage at Lasswade, still to the fore, and practically unchanged (it was lately in the market). Of Scott's Edinburgh homes, little here, save to say that 39, Castle Street—"dear old 39"—was his abode for many years, where his best work was done, and at whose window Lockhart beheld that striking, somewhat weird, Belshazzar-like vision of a hand writing far into the early hours of the morning.

As Sheriff of Selkirkshire, or, more familiarly, and as he liked best to be styled, the "Shirra," Scott lived for a time at Clovenfords Inn on the Tweed, recently restored, and again catering for the angler and summer visitor. Wordsworth slept here on his first Border tour in 1803, of which the fruit was "Yarrow Revisited."

And when we came to Clovenford,
Then said my winsome marrow,
"Whate'er betide we'll turn aside
And see the Braes of Yarrow."

Not far off is Ashiestiel, from 1804 to 1811 the centre of some of the dearest associations of Scott's life. For one of Scott's temperament and hobbies, there

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY SIR J.
WATSON GORDON, R.A.

From a photo by Messrs. Valentine & Sons, Ltd., Dundee

ABBOTSFORD AND THE EILDON HILLS

could not have been a more ideal dwelling. Quiet and retired and situated on a singularly enchanting reach of the Tweed, the scenery all round about has been well imaged in his own deathless lines. "You approached it," says Lockhart, "through an old-fashioned garden with holly-hedges, and broad green terrace-walks. On one side, close under the windows, is a deep ravine, clothed with venerable trees, down which a mountain rivulet is heard, more than seen, in its progress to the Tweed. The river itself is separated from the high bank on which the house stands only by a narrow meadow of the richest verdure. Opposite and all around are the green hills. The valley there is narrow, and the aspect in every direction is that of perfect pastoral repose. The heights immediately behind are those which divide the Tweed from the Yarrow, and the latter celebrated stream lies within an easy ride, in the course of which the traveller passes through a variety

From a photo by John Patrick, Edinburgh
LOCH KATRINE

wrote in the old dining-room—not the small study which Ruskin saw and described in “Fors.” vol. viii.—the modern library, a quaint, old-fashioned room on the east side of the entrance porch. Through one of the original windows, now converted into a press beside the fireplace, the greyhounds Douglas and Percy bounded out and in at will. Scott kept his books upstairs in the dressing-room. Not any part of the furniture is associated with him except a large easy-chair, gifted by Scott to his invalid cousin, Jane of the finest mountain scenery in the south of Scotland.” Ashestiel has altered considerably — “sorrowfully changed,” as Ruskin wrote in 1883, since Scott’s occupancy. The east wing has been added, and the entrance, which formerly faced the Tweed, is now turned hillwards. Scott Russell, and afterwards used by himself during the last sad days at Abbotsford. A portrait and a punch-bowl, presents to his cousin, are the sole remaining relics. Revisiting Ashestiel in 1826, Scott wrote in his diary: “Here I passed some happy years. Did I ever pass unhappy years anywhere?" The place was printed deep on his heart, and had he been able to purchase the property, Abbotsford might never have arisen from the swamps of Clarty Hole. At Ashiestiel, his fame as a poet rose to its full height, and the locality is therefore more interesting to students of his poetry than any other of the Scott shrines. "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" (partly), "Marmion," "The Lady of the Lake," were written and published during his stay at

From a photo by Messrs. Valentine & Sons, Ltd., Dundee
MELROSE ABBEY

THE CHANTREY BUST OF SIR WALTER
SCOTT, 1829

Rischgitz Collection.

Painted for King George IV. in 1820, and now in the Corridor at Windsor Castle

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY SIR THOMAS
LAWRENCE

Rischgitz Collection

at his feet, and the glamour of old romance around him, the great Minstrel sang his immortal lays. It is to be regretted that Ashestiel does not receive the recognition which it ought to have as a prominent Scott landmark. There is reason to fear that Ruskin's taunt may be, after all, only too well founded, that the birthplace of "Marmion" is in danger of being forgotten as a favourite haunt of the most illustrious figure in Scottish literary history.

Within easy reach of Ashestiel lie a number of the best-known shrines of Scott.

Ashestiel, and the first chapters of "Waverley" dashed off and laid aside, to be examined some years later, and finally lost sight of until their more momentous appearance in 1813. A knoll, on the adjoining farm of Peel, and overlooking the Peel or Glenkinnon Burn, where Scott is said to have penned large portions of "Marmion," is still known as the "Shirra's Knowe," and another favourite spot is pointed out underneath a tree on the river bank not far from the house. There, looking out towards Neidpath Fell and the "sister heights of Yair," with the "ever-dear Tweed" in pleasant babble

From a photo by Jno. Clafferton, Galashiels

RHYMER'S GLEN

From the picture by C. M. Hardie, R.S.A.

FINDING THE MS. OF "WAVERLEY"

(Reproduced from W. S. Crockett's "The Scott Country," by kind permission of Messrs. A. & C. Black)

Innerleithen has long established its claim to be his "St. Ronan's." A mere village of six hundred inhabitants when the novel was written, it is now a busy manufacturing centre, with a population of about four thousand. The "Tully-Weolan" of "Waverley" is more than likely to be the history-haunted House of Traquair, on the Tweed, farther over from Innerleithen. Change has scarcely touched the place. It stands to-day solitary in its old-worldness, no abode in Scotland more quaint and curious, turreted, walled, buttressed, windowed, and loopholed, all as in the olden time. Still is its great gate shut against all intrusion, and the fierce Bradwardine Bears frown as in years bygone. At Peebles, Scott found his prototype of "Meg Dods" — a "landlady of the olden world"; and the "Cleikum Inn," erected in 1653, and altered only slightly, has long been known as the Cross Keys. Scott spent not a few "cheerful

From an engraving by Edward Smith
 SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY SIR DAVID WILKIE, R.A.
 Rischgitz Collection

days," as he told the Wordsworths, in Neidpath Castle when it was inhabited by Professor Ferguson and his family. It is the scene of his poem, "The Maid of Neidpath," and is still in a fair state of repair. The Black Dwarf's cottage in the Vale of Manor—Veitch's "sweetest glen of all the South"—is not that in which Scott had, in 1797, the terribly weird interview with David Ritchie, when, strong and fearless man as he was, he became pale as ashes, and his person was agitated in every limb. The present structure was set up in 1802, but the original door and window have been retained.

Further up the Tweed, we come to Drummelzier Castle, mentioned in "The Betrothed" Introduction; Talla Linns, the scene of a "Heart of Midlothian" incident (chapter xviii.); and over the watershed, on the Annan side a little, the "deep, black, blackguard-looking abyss" of the Devil's Beef Tub, referred to in the Laird of Summertrees' adventure in "Redgauntlet" (chapter xi.). At Yarrow Kirk, across the hills from Ashestiel, Scott frequently worshipped. His maternal great-grandfather, John Rutherford, had been minister of the parish, and the mural tablet to his memory in the back wall he styled the "shrine of my ancestors." The place is hardly at all changed since Scott's day. Doubtless many of the houses in Yarrow and Ettrick stand as Scott saw them during his period of Sheriffship. Blackhouse, the home of "dear Willie" Laidlaw, frequently visited by Scott with Leyden and Skene in their ballad-hunting excursions, has not altered much. Altrieve—Hogg's home—is, however, practically gone, merged in a new building with a new name—Eldinhope. Of Mount Benger not a stone is left on another. The Gordon Arms has been much enlarged since Scott and the Shepherd took here their final farewell. Mungo Park's birthplace at Foulshiels is a roofless ruin, and Ettrickhall, near Ettrick Kirk, where Scott first met James Hogg, demolished in 1830, has been recently commemorated by a handsome freestone obelisk.

It is to Abbotsford, however, that one naturally turns in dealing with the homes of Sir Walter. Built between 1811 and 1825, Scott had only, practically speaking, one brief year of comfort and ease of mind in its occupancy. In 1826 came the biggest literary financial failure of the century. Soon afterwards Lady Scott died. Scott's hair began to whiten, and with intervals of broken health and pressing monetary difficulties, he was worried enough. An ugly, filthy spot was the original Abbotsford. Gradually there sprang up the modest villa, with its few enclosed fields. By-and-by came a larger addition to both house and land, until finally it had grown to baronial proportions—a "romance in stone and

A PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY ANDREW GEDDES, A.R.A., 1818

In the Scottish National Portrait Gallery

(Reproduced from the Edinburgh Waverley Edition, by kind permission of Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack) lime" inside and outside a tangible, unique commentary on the nation's history. Following Scott's death, the place appears to have been somewhat neglected. In 1853, Mr. Hope-Scott, husband of Lockhart's daughter, came into possession, and a new era began. An eminent and wealthy Parliamentary barrister, anxious to make Abbotsford his principal summer residence, he spent large sums on additions and improvements. "An arrangement of access by which visitors might be admitted to the show-rooms was constructed, and for the use of his own family he built, during the years 1855-57, on the east side, a large addition, consisting of a chapel, hall, drawing-room, boudoir, and a suite of bedrooms. The old kitchen, with its motto, 'Waste not, want not,' was turned into a linen room, and there was erected a long range of new kitchen offices facing the Tweed, which raised the elevation of Scott's edifice and improved the façade of the house from the river. At the same time the avenue was lengthened, a lodge built, and the main road shifted several yards back, thus giving a privacy to the house which it had not possessed in former days." This Hope-Scott extension, in light freestone, is easily recognisable in contrast to the darker hue of Sir Walter's house, which was built of native blue whin.

But Abbotsford must be seen to be understood, and no place, as has been said, is more popular

*From a painting by C. R.
Leslie, R.A., 1824*
SIR WALTER SCOTT
Rischitz Collection

Engraved by Finden
SIR WALTER SCOTT, FROM A PAINTING
BY G. S. NEWTON, R.A.

Painted for Mr. Murray by Thomas Phillips, R.A., 1818

SIR WALTER SCOTT
Rischgitz Collection

as a tourist centre. Everything has been left very much as in Scott's lifetime, and for the visitor there is the rarest possible treat. The rooms shown, and in this order, are the Study, Library, Drawing-Room, Armoury, and Entrance Hall. The Dining-Room—his own great parlour—is not open to the public. Here the final tragedy was played out on that balmy afternoon of 1832—"a beautiful day, so warm that every window was wide open, and so perfectly still that the sound of all others most delicious to his ear—the gentle ripple of the Tweed over its pebbles—was distinctly audible as we knelt around the bed, and his eldest son kissed and closed his eyes."

Melrose, the Capital of the Scott Country, and the "Kennaquhair" of "The Monastery," has changed considerably since Scott's day. The modern town may be said to be entirely his creation. Handsome hotels, a palatial Hydropathic, the fine suburban villas on the Weir Hill side, have all sprung up since then. And in summer it is, perhaps, the gayest and most pleasure-haunted place on the Border. The Abbotsford road is crowded with the

JOHN GIBSON LOCKHART, SON-IN-LAW AND BIOGRAPHER
OF SIR WALTER SCOTT

(Reproduced by kind permission of Mr. John Murray from a portrait in his possession)

CHIEFSWOOD COTTAGE

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Lockhart in the early years of their married life

(Reproduced from W. S. Crockett's "The Scott Country," by kind permission of Messrs. A. and C. Black) inevitable coach and waggonette traffic, and the now ubiquitous motor-car. "St. David's ruined pile," too, has its constant stream, and, thanks to the ducal owner, the structure is as well kept and as well preserved as when the Bard of his clan was its most frequent and most honoured visitor. The like can be said of Dryburgh, where he now sleeps -- in picturesqueness and seclusion of situation the most charming monastic ruin in Great Britain.

All is silent as a dream,
But for a throstle on the ancient yew,
But for the low faint murmur of the stream ;
And sweet old-fashioned scents are floating through
The arch from thyme and briar, as for ever Shall his sweet nature haunt this fabled river.

W. S. CROCKETT

THE PORTRAITS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT

NOTHING in Sir Walter Scott's remarkable career is more notable than his capacity for finding time to meet the wishes, and even to gratify the whims of friends. Throughout a life full to overflowing with literary labour and professional duties, he seemed to have leisure for everything. And not least is this evident in the number of times he sat for his portrait. Proud and glad of

A PORTRAIT
OF
MRS. J. G. LOCKHART

Sir Walter Scott's eldest daughter Sophia was married to
Mr. John Gibson Lockhart
on the 26th of April, 1820

(Reproduced from
Lockhart's "Life of Scott,"
by kind permission of Messrs. A. & C. Black)

"THE ABBOTSFORD FAMILY," BY SIR DAVID WILKIE, R.A.

In the National Gallery of Scotland

(Reproduced from "Sir David Wilkie" in the "Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture" Series, by kind permission of Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons)

his friendship, his friends were continually asking him to sit to some artist of their acquaintance. Scott shared his favourite staghound's repugnance to posing, for we find him writing in his Diary, apropos of a portrait that Terry the actor wanted, "This is very far from being agreeable. I am as tired of the operation as old Maida, who has been so often sketched that he got up and walked off with signs of loathing whenever he saw an artist unfurl his paper and handle his brushes"; but he was supremely good-natured, and always willing to oblige a personal friend or a young painter. It is to this that we owe our exceedingly intimate knowledge of his appearance from year to year, a knowledge unequalled in the case of any other author.

Besides many minor sketches, there are fully thirty important portraits of Scott from life, and of a number of these there are several repetitions, for which he gave special sittings. Of originals more than four-and-twenty were executed during the last fourteen or fifteen years of his life—the busiest of all—indeed, one may say that every year after 1815 was marked by the appearance of at least one new portrait, and probably by sittings for replicas of others.

A
PORTRAIT OF SCOTT, BY KNIGHT, 1826

Rischgitz Collection

From a photo by A. A. Inglis, Edinburgh

ABBOTSFORD FROM THE SOUTH-WEST

to the profile drawing by Chantrey and the Death Mask. The ivory of the original having been cracked, it was given by Mrs. Scott to a relation, from whose family it passed into the hands of David Laing, who in turn bequeathed it to the Scottish Society of Antiquaries, by which body it is now lent to the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. The version at Abbotsford is an old copy, as is that which belongs to Mr. John Murray. Twenty years passed before the next authentic portrait, the miniature in Yeomanry

It was during a visit to Bath, in 1777, that the first known portrait was made. He was only in his sixth year, but the general moulding of the head, with its abnormal height above the eyes, and even of the features, has a strong resemblance to the portraits of his maturity, particularly uniform, was painted to send to his fiancée, Miss Carpenter, on the eve of their wedding. It is well enough in its way, but lacks character, and except for association (it lies in a case in the library at Abbotsford, beside a miniature of Lady Scott, for which it was exchanged) is of

From a photo by A. A. Inglis, Edinburgh

THE ENTRANCE HALL AT ABBOTSFORD

SIR WALTER SCOTT AND HIS FRIENDS, FROM A PAINTING BY THOMAS FAED, R.A.

Sir Walter Scott	Rev. George Crabbe	Sir Adam Ferguson	Sir David Wilkie
James Hogg	John G. Lockhart	Thomas Moore	Archibald Constable
Henry Mackenzie	W. Wordsworth	Thomas Campbell	James Ballantyne
John Wilson	Lord Jeffrey	Sir William Allan	Sir Humphry Davy
	Thomas Thomson

(Reproduced from W. S. Crockett's "The Scott Country," by kind permission of Messrs. A. & C. Black)

little account. Of greater interest is the first portrait in oils, painted in 1805, by James Saxon, a Manchester artist, who for a while met with considerable success in Edinburgh. I have not seen this picture, but, judging from other of Saxon's portraits, such as the "John Clerk of Eldin," father of Scott's friends, William Clerk and Lord Eldin, or the "Lady Scott," it should be well painted; while the engraving by James Heath for "The Lady of the Lake" (1810)—it was the first published portrait of the poet—bears out the contemporary estimate that it conveyed "an impress of the elasticity and youthful vivacity which Scott used to complain wore off after he was forty." Meanwhile, however, Scott, now famous as the author of "The Lay" and "Marmion," had sat (1808) to Raeburn, at the request of his publisher, Archibald Constable, for the full-length which is so well known from the brown mezzotint by Charles Turner (1810). Although Lockhart did not care much for this as a likeness, and it cannot be considered one of its painter's successes, Scott thought highly of it, for, having quarrelled with Constable, he asked if he might have it, and, the request being declined in "most handsome terms," got Raeburn to paint (1809) a replica, for which he gave several sittings. This, which hangs in the drawing-room at Abbotsford, is in every respect a finer picture than its predecessor, now the property of the Duke of Buccleuch, from which

From a photo by Jno. Clapherton, Galashiels

THE OLD TOLBOOTH DOOR AT ABBOTSFORD

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY SIR WILLIAM ALLAN, R.A., 1832

In the National Portrait Gallery

it differs in background and by the introduction of a white and yellow greyhound in addition to "Camp," the bull-terrier, who also figures in Saxon's portrait. The Abbotsford picture has never been engraved, but, through the kindness of the Hon. Mrs. Maxwell Scott, Messrs. Jack were able to include a photogravure of the head in their "Edinburgh" edition of the novels.

Between this Raeburn and the Chantrey bust of 1820 the most important portrait painted was that by Andrew Geddes. Henning produced a drawing and a medalion about 1809; W. Nicholson etched in 1817 a water-colour he had made two years before; in 1817 also Wilkie painted the "Abbotsford Family," which some time ago passed from the Ferguson family, by a member of which it had been commissioned, into the National Gallery of Scotland; and a year later Thomas Phillips, to whom we are indebted for so many portraits of literary and artistic celebrities, executed the picture in which Sir Walter is depicted in a tartan plaid, which hangs in Mr. Murray's rooms in Albemarle Street. But these are of little interest compared with the Geddes, which is, perhaps, the most convincing, as it is the most artistic, pictorial record of Scott in existence.

From a photo by A. A. Inglis, Edinburgh

THE LIBRARY AT ABBOTSFORD

Probably a study for a very large picture, since ruined by neglect, commemorative of the Discovery of the Scottish Regalia, it was painted about 1818, the year of "The Heart of Midlothian," and shows him at the very height of his powers. His eyes have that curiously dreamy, almost sleepy, look so characteristic of his expression when lost in contemplation, and the mouth holds, as no other painted mouth of his does, the promise of infinite humour, pathos, and good nature. The artist also made a pencil drawing, which has been engraved, and both picture and drawing are to be seen in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery.

From a photo by A. A. Inglis, Edinburgh

THE STUDY AT ABBOTSFORD

In a paper like this it is obviously impossible to deal in detail with every likeness produced after 1820. That year itself saw Scott in London to receive his baronetcy, and the commencement of two fine portraits. Chantrey, who had made Scott's acquaintance through his Dumfriesshire assistant, Allan Cunningham, asked him to sit, and the result was the charming and characteristic bust which, in Lockhart's opinion, "alone preserves for posterity the cast of expression most fondly remembered by all who ever mingled in his domestic circle." Six years later, as the inscription on the marble records, it was presented by the sculptor to the poet as a token of esteem, and to-day it stands in the niche at the end of the Abbotsford library, where Scott's son placed it the day after his father's funeral. In addition to casts in bronze for Robert Cadell and Allan Cunningham, the sculptor carved a

SIR WALTER SCOTT IN HIS STUDY, FROM A PAINTING BY SIR WILLIAM ALLAN, R.A.

Rischgitz Collection

duplicate for Apsley House, and, when he presented the original to Sir Walter, he received sittings for another, which was afterwards acquired by Sir Robert Peel. Quite as interesting in its way is the charming drawing (in the Oxford University Gallery) done by Chantrey at this time, and reproduced by Ruskin in "Fors Clavigera" (xxxi.) as "Walter of the Borderland."

Though less intimate in mood, the Lawrence portrait, which dates from this visit, is also of first-class importance. To Scott the request to sit came in most flattering form, for Sir Thomas informed him that his was to be first of a series of the King's most distinguished contemporaries that his Majesty desired to have for Windsor Castle. Scott's opinion, recorded in his Diary for November, 1826, when he gave the President a final sitting, was one of wonder that "Sir Thomas had made so much out of an old weather-beaten block"; and Lockhart thought that, while the picture was finer when the head floated against a sea of dark blank canvas, and the figure was, as it is, somewhat out of scale with the head, the artist had caught with admirable skill one of the loftiest expressions of his sitter's countenance.

In 1822 Sir Henry Raeburn, at the request of Lord Montagu, had a second innings, and produced the singularly massive and powerful head that belongs to the Earl of Home, and several other

SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY SIR JOHN WATSON
GORDON, R.A., 1830
Rischitz Collection

From a photo by Messrs. Valentine & Sons, Ltd., Dundee

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S TOMB IN DRYBURGH ABBEY

work of Raeburn's hand will not stand investigation. Joseph's bust, which shows an independent reading of Scott's character, belongs to the following year, and 1824 is remarkable for sittings for at least three new portraits. Newton's, of which versions exist at Abbotsford and Mr. John Murray's, was considered the best domestic portrait ever done: but the other American, Leslie, was less fortunate, and missed the essential character. His commission was from Mr. Ticknor, of Boston, and the portrait painted for him is now in the Boston Gallery: but replicas are owned by Lord Rosebery and in Australia. Wilkie's, which now belongs to Sir Donald Currie, was a study for the big picture of George IV. entering Holyrood—a Royal commission—in which Scott figures as the "Bard." The portraits by Maclise

From a photo by Messrs. Valentine & Sons, Ltd., Dundee

DRYBURGH ABBEY

A PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BY SIR EDWIN LANDSEER, R.A., PAINTED
IN 1834, AFTER THE AUTHOR'S DEATH

Rischgit Collection

From a photo by John Patrick, Edinburgh.

THE SCOTT MONUMENT AT EDINBURGH, WITH A VIEW OF THE CASTLE IN THE BACKGROUND

(1825), Knight (1826), and Graham Gilbert (1829) need not detain us, although the last represents the "Author of Waverley" in his capacity as President of the Royal Society (Edinburgh), and the first was so popular that the sale of reproductions enabled the artist to set up a studio. 1828, like 1824, produced three portraits, of which Colvin Smith's was such a favourite that the artist was called on for a score of replicas. It is not a great work, however, and Lockhart's opinion was unfavourable. Haydon's, incidentally referred to in the Diary, has disappeared: and that in which "the old wizard, Northcote, who really resembles an animated mummy," represented himself painting Sir Walter, I have only seen in a small version, perhaps that referred to by Allan Cunningham, which, when shown at the Glasgow International Exhibition in 1901, was described as "Sir David Wilkie painting the portrait of Sir Walter Scott"!

Perhaps the last portraits, that show Sir Walter before his heroic struggle to die without debt had broken him down completely, were painted by Sir John Watson Gordon from the original study, in which the head alone is finished, and which the artist always retained, now in the Scottish Portrait Gallery. Of the pictures founded on that study the one painted for Mr. Cadell (now in Lady Foulis's possession) is best known, although a cabinet full-length showing Scott at work is also popular. Some ten years earlier the future President of the R.S.A., then plain John Watson, had painted an excellent seated half-length for Lady Abercorn, which, a few years ago, was secured at Christie's for a long price by Sir William Agnew. Like many of the other portraits, it includes a dog. The Edinburgh Gallery also contains Sir Francis Grant's small full-length, painted at Abbotsford while Scott was dictating "Count Robert of Paris" to Willie Laidlaw; and a most interesting little drawing by Crombie (1831), in which Sir Walter's appearance, as he limped about the Edinburgh streets, is very happily caught. A similar note is struck in an excellent small full-length that Sir William Allan did for Mr. Blackwood some years before; and to Allan, whom Scott befriended, and set upon lines which give him an important place in the history of Scottish painting, we are also indebted for the last portrait from life. A cabinet-sized canvas representing him reading a proclamation of Queen Mary's, it was shown in the Royal Academy of 1832 a few months before Scott returned from Italy to die within sound of his beloved Tweed.

Hanging in the National Portrait Gallery beside Allan's picture is a very attractive and vital oil sketch by Landseer, painted a year or two after Scott's death, but founded on close intimacy and sketches from life. And with mention of this and of the curiously fascinating Death Mask, which lies in a little room off the study in Abbotsford, this brief summary of the principal portraits of Sir Walter Scott must close.

JAMES L. CAW.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Sir Walter Scott

see frontispiece

Sir Walter Scott's
great-grandfather, "Beardie"

see page 2

Sir Walter Scott was born on August 15th, 1771, being the ninth child of Walter Scott, Writer to the Signet, who married Anne Rutherford in April, 1758. "My birth was neither distinguished nor sordid," wrote the author in his Autobiography, with reference to his own descent. "According to the prejudices of my country, it was esteemed gentle, as I was connected, though remotely, with ancient families both by my father's and mother's side. My father's grandfather was Walter Scott, well known in Teviotdale by the surname of 'Benslie.' He was the second son of Walter Scott, first Laird of Raeburn, who was third son of Sir William Scott, and the grandson of Walter Scott, commonly called in tradition 'Auld Wat,' of Harden. . . .

'Beardie,' my great-grandfather aforesaid, derived his cognomen from a venerable beard, which he wore unblemished by razor or scissors, in token of his regret for the banished dynasty of Stewart. It would have been well that his zeal had stopped there. But he took arms, and intrigued in their cause, until he lost all he had in the world, and, as I have heard, ran a narrow risk of being hanged, had it not been for the interference of Ann, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth."

Of "Beardie's" three sons, Robert, the second, quarrelled with his father, turned Whig, and set up as a farmer at Sandyknowe, where he reared a large family, the author being descended from the eldest son, who was born in 1729. "His person and face were uncommonly handsome, with an expression of sweetness of temper which was not fallacious," continued Sir Walter in his Autobiography. "My father was a singular instance of a man rising to eminence in a profession for which nature had in some degree unfitted him. . . . In the actual business of the profession which he embraced, in that sharp and intuitive perception which is necessary in driving bargains for himself and others, in availing himself of the wants, necessities, caprices and follies of some, and guarding against the knavery and malice of others, Uncle Toby himself could not have conducted himself with more simplicity than my father."

Sir Walter Scott's
father

see page 6

Sir Walter Scott's
mother

see page 3

College Wynd, Edinburgh, the birthplace of Sir Walter Scott.

see page 4

No. 25, George
Square,
Edinburgh

see page 8

Sandyknowe
Tower

see page 9

Waverley Lodge
Kelso

see page 10

The Grammar School, Kelso

see page 10

Scott's mother was the sole surviving child, by his first wife, of John Rutherford, Professor of Medicine in the University of Edinburgh. She was short of stature and "by no means comely." According to her son, she joined to a light and happy temper of mind a strong turn to study poetry and works of imagination. She was sincerely devout, but her religion was of a cast less austere than his father's. The house in which Scott was born, and which was later demolished, was situated at the head of the north side of the College Wynd, Edinburgh, opposite the gateway of the University. The building was plain of aspect and consisted of four stories, of which the upper floors were the abode of the Scott family. Soon after the author's birth, his father removed to a new house at No. 25, George Square, and this continued to be Sir Walter's "most established place of residence" until his marriage in 1797.

In the summer of 1773, at the commencement of his third year, Scott was sent to Sandyknowe, his grandfather's farm at Smailholm. Above the house was a small loch, and on the summit of the overhanging crags stood the ruined tower of Sandyknowe, which has fittingly been called "the outstanding sentinel of all the lower valley of the Tweed." On the death of his grandfather, the home at Sandyknowe was broken up, and his aunt removed to Kelso. "My health had become rather delicate from rapid growth," he wrote, "and my father was easily persuaded to allow me to spend half a year at Kelso with my kind aunt, Miss Janet Scott, whose inmate I became. At this time she resided in a small house, situated very pleasantly in a large garden, to the eastward of the churchyard of Kelso, which extended down to the Tweed. It was then my father's property, from whom it was afterwards purchased by my uncle."

The rudiments of education were imparted to Scott at the Old Grammar School at Kelso, which he attended during his vacation from the Edinburgh High School in 1783, and where he also acted as a kind of pupil-teacher, the master at that time being Mr. Lancelot Whale, "an excellent classical scholar, a humorist, and a worthy man," with a supreme antipathy to the puns which his uncommon name frequently gave rise to.

In November, 1783, Scott began to attend classes at Edinburgh College, but a severe illness interrupted his studies and he returned again to Kelso. In 1786 he was apprenticed to his father as Writer to the Signet; but two years later commenced studying for the Bar, to which he was called on July 11th, 1792.

On December 24th, 1797, Scott married Miss Charlotte Margaret Carpenter, the daughter of a French refugee. "Without the features of a regular beauty," wrote Lockhart, describing Miss Carpenter, "she was rich in personal attractions: a form that was fashioned as light as a fay's; a complexion of the clearest and lightest olive; eyes large, deep-set, and dazzling, of the finest Italian brown; and a profusion of silken tresses, black as the raven's wing: her address hovering between the reserve of a pretty young Englishwoman who has not mingled largely in general society, and a certain natural archness and gaiety that suited well with the accompaniment of a French accent."

The marriage took place at Carlisle, and the newly-wedded pair lived first at No. 103, George Street, Edinburgh, whence they removed to South Castle Street. The summers, however, during the early years of married life were spent at Lasswade Cottage, situated on the Esk, about six miles from Edinburgh. It was a small house, with but one room of large dimensions and a good-sized garden, commanding a beautiful view, in which Scott himself took great delight in training the plants and creepers.

Before settling at Lasswade it had been Sir Walter's custom to make a "yearly raid" into Liddesdale each autumn at the rising of the Courts, chiefly with a view to exploring the grim and inaccessible region in the neighbourhood of—

Hermitage in Liddesdale,
Its dungeons and its towers.

This awesome fortress is much associated with Scott. Here it was that the Douglas ring he wore was found, and here, too, he was represented by Raeburn, in the first portrait painted by that artist in 1803, at full length, sitting by a ruined wall, with Camp at his feet and the mountains of Liddesdale in the background.

In 1799 Scott was appointed Sheriff-depute of Selkirkshire, having the support of the Duke of Buccleuch in applying for the office. His duties were light and the salary was £300 per annum, while the title of "Shirra" invested him with great importance in the eyes of the neighbourhood. Scott was now living at No. 39, Castle Street, Edinburgh; and, the business of the Court being over, would depart for his "city home," which Coleridge described as "divinely situated," for it looked up the street "full upon the rock and castle." The room in which Sir Walter worked was behind the dining-room, and here he finished "Waverley" and "Guy Mannering," besides writing "Peveril of the Peak," "Quentin Durward," and "St. Ronan's Well."

Scott gave up Lasswade Cottage in 1804, and removed to Ashestiel, where he wrote "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," "Marmion," and "The Lady of

Lady Scott
(Charlotte
Margaret Carpenter)

see page 7

Lasswade Cottage

see page 12

Sir Walter Scott
at Hermitage Castle

see page 11

Old Sheriff Court House, Selkirk

see page 13

No. 39, Castle
Street,
Edinburgh

see page 13

Ashestiel

see page 14

the Lake." Ashestiel was originally an old Border tower, part of which was enclosed in the residence. The west wing was added by Mrs. Russell, Scott's aunt, making it an odd-looking, three-cornered building. The house was protected on the north by the Tweed, and on the east by a deep ravine clothed with trees, through which runs the little brook referred to in the opening lines of "Marmion":—

Low in its dark and narrow glen,
You scarce the rivulet might ken,
So thick the tangled greenwood grew,
So feeble trill'd the streamlet through;
Now, murmuring hoarse, and frequent seen
Through bush and brier, no longer green,
An angry brook it sweeps the glade.

During 1806-7 Scott was working upon "Dryden," and was at this time appointed Secretary to the Parliamentary Commission upon Scottish Jurisprudence. "Marmion" was published on February 23rd, 1808, to be followed in 1810 by "The Lady of the Lake," which equalled the success of its predecessors, resulting in a rush of visitors to Loch Katrine.

Loch Katrine

see page 18

The summer dawn's reflected hue
To purple changed Loch Katrine blue;
Mildly and soft the western breeze
Just kissed the lake, just stirred the trees,
And the pleased lake, like maiden coy,
Trembled, but dimpled not for joy;
The mountain shadows on her breast
Were neither broken nor at rest;
In bright uncertainty they lie,
Like future joys to Fancy's eye.

His lease of Ashestiel running out, Scott resolved to buy a place of his own. He fixed finally upon an estate five miles farther down the Tweed, consisting of a meadow, one hundred acres of rough land, and a small farmhouse, for which he paid £4,000, and to which he gave the name of Abbotsford. An additional attraction, in his eyes, to this neighbourhood was the proximity of Melrose Abbey, to which the lands had previously belonged, and of which the author gives a charming picture in "The Lay of the Last Minstrel":

If thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright
Go visit it by the pale moonlight;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild, but to float, the ruins gray.
When the broken arches are black in night,
And each shafted oriel glimmers white;
When the cold light's uncertain shower
Streams on the ruined central tower;

Then go—but go alone the while—
Then view St. David's ruined pile;
And, home returning, soothly swear,
Was never scene so sad and fair.

Abbotsford may be called the centre of Sir Walter Scott's Country. Originally it was a small farm named Cartlehole. But the farm was gradually converted into an estate by the acquisition of adjoining lands, for which the author paid large sums. He concluded the purchase of Toftfield for £10,000, altering its name to Huntly Burn, from the mountain brook which ran through the grounds. This burn found its way from the Cauld-

Abbotsford and the Eildon Hills

see page 17

Melrose Abbey

see page 18

Rhymer's Glen

see page 20

shields Loch through the Rhymer's Glen, which had been previously acquired. Scott was thus made master (as he believed) of all the haunts of Thomas the Rhymer, and the scene of his interview with the Queen of the Fairies.

Finding the MS.
of "Waverley"

see page 21

On July 1st, 1814, Scott's edition of Swift, in nineteen volumes, was published, to be followed a fortnight later by the appearance of "Waverley." This novel had been commenced shortly after the author had settled at Ashiestiel. But after writing about one-third of the first volume, he cast the work aside, mainly on the advice of his friend William Erskine (afterwards Lord Kinnedder). For many years the manuscript remained untouched, and it was not until the summer of 1813 that the missing sheets were discovered by sheer accident in the lumber-room at Abbotsford; and the remaining volumes were then completed for publication in an incredibly short space of time.

John Gibson
Lockhart

see page 25

Sir Walter first made the acquaintance of John Gibson Lockhart, his future son-in-law and biographer, in May, 1818. Lockhart was a man endowed with personal charm of a high order, having inherited the fine Italian features and dark eyes of his mother, a woman of extraordinary beauty. The turning point in his career had been the publication of an article on "Heraldry," written at an early age, through which he was brought to the notice of Blackwood. He married Scott's eldest daughter, Sophia, on April 29th, 1820. Mrs. Lockhart died in May, 1837, and the following, taken from Stanzas on her Funeral by the Rev. Henry Hart Milman, gives some slight insight into the beauty of her character:

A portrait of Mrs J. G.
Lockhart

see page 27

Meet emblem of that lightsome spirit thou!
That still, wherever it might come,
Shed sunshine o'er that happy home,
Her task of kindness and gladness now
Absolved with the element above
Hath mingled and become pure light, pure joy, pure love.

Chiefswood
Cottage

see page 29

In the early years of their married life Mr. and Mrs. Lockhart lived at Chiefswood Cottage, in the vicinity of Melrose. This residence, originally called Burnfoot, had been purchased by Scott for the purpose of finally rounding off the Abbotsford estates. Sir Walter was a constant visitor at Chiefswood at such times as he found it possible to escape from the "nauseous stir" at Abbotsford, and he penned a large portion of "The Pirate" at the cottage, where Lockhart's own novels were also written. It was here that the latter received the offer tendered him by Disraeli of a post on the Representative, a London daily, which, however, he declined, accepting instead the editorship of the Quarterly Review.

Of Abbotsford, as it stood completed in 1824, a very full description is given in Lockhart's "Life":

Abbotsford from the south-west.

see page 30

"On all sides, except towards the river, the house connects itself with the gardens. It is eminently imposing in its general effect; and in most of its details, not only full of historical interest, but of beauty also. It is no doubt a thing of shreds and patches, but they have been combined by a masterly hand. . . . The house is more than one hundred and fifty feet long in front, was built at two different onsets; has a tall tower at either end, the one not least like the other; presents sundry crowfooted, alias zigzagged, gables to the eye; a myriad of indentations and parapets, and machicolated eaves; most fantastic waterspouts; labelled windows, not a few of them

The Entrance Hall at Abbotsford

see page 30

The Library at Abbotsford

see page 33

The Study at Abbotsford

see page 33

The Old Tolbooth Door at Abbotsford

see page 32

Sir Walter Scott's Tomb in Dryburgh Abbey

see page 30

Dryburgh Abbey

see page 30

The Scott Monument at Edinburgh

see page 38

painted glass: groups of right Elizabethan chimneys: balconies of divers fashions, greater and less: and a very noble projecting gateway.

"The hall is about forty feet long by twenty in height and breadth. The walls are of richly carved oak, most part of it exceedingly dark, and brought, it seems, from the old Abbey of Dunfermline: the roof, a series of pointed arches of the same, each beam presenting in the centre a shield of arms richly blazoned. . . . The floor of this hall is black and white marble, from the Hebrides, wrought lozenge-wise: and the upper walls are completely hung with arms and armour.

"The library is an oblong of some fifty feet by thirty, with a projection in the centre, opposite the fireplace, terminating in a grand bow-window, fitted up with books. The roof is of carved oak again—a very rich pattern chiefly à la Roslin. The collection amounts in this room to some fifteen or twenty thousand volumes. The only picture is Sir Walter's eldest son, in hussar uniform, and holding his horse—by Allan, of Edinburgh—a noble portrait, over the fireplace.

"This room (the sanctum of the author), which seems to be a crib of about twenty feet, contains, of what is properly called furniture, nothing but a small writing-table in the centre, a plain arm-chair covered with black leather, and a single chair besides: plain symptoms that this is no place for company. On either side of the fireplace there are shelves filled with books of reference, chiefly, of course, folios: but, except these, there are no books save the contents of a light gallery which runs round three sides of the room, and is reached by a hanging stair of carved oak in one corner. There are only two portraits—an original of the beautiful and melancholy head of Claverhouse (Bonny Dundee), and a small full-length of Rob Roy."

The Old Tolbooth door was taken from the "Bastille of Edinburgh," and inserted in the wall abutting on the entrance porch at Abbotsford. Whilst Scott was busy with his plans of building, he wrote to Mr. Terry with regard to it:

"I expect to get some decorations from the old Tolbooth of Edinburgh, particularly the copestones of the doorway, or lintels, as we call them, and a niche or two—one very handsome indeed! Better get a niche from the Tolbooth than in it, to which such building operations are apt to bring the projectors."

Sir Walter Scott died at Abbotsford on September 21st, 1832, and on the evening of Wednesday, the 26th, his remains were laid beside those of his wife in the sepulchre of his ancestors at Dryburgh Abbey. This Abbey dates from the middle of the twelfth century. It would have descended to Sir Walter by inheritance had not one of his ancestors been obliged to part with it owing to falling into bankruptcy. "The ancient patrimony," wrote Scott, "was sold for a trifle, and my father, who might have purchased it with ease, was dissuaded by my grandfather from doing so, and thus we have nothing left of Dryburgh but the right of stretching our bones there."

The foundation-stone of the monument raised to Sir Walter Scott at Edinburgh was laid on August 15th, 1840. The monument was completed at a cost of £15,650, and its inauguration was celebrated on the same day six years later.

THE SCOTT COUNTRY

By W. S. CROCKETT

In
large crown 8vo
cloth, gilt top containing 162 Illustrations

6s.

The Memorial to David Ritchie, the original of "The Black Dwarf," in Manor Kirkyard.

In
large crown 8vo
cloth, gilt top containing 162 Illustrations

6s.

Some Press Opinions of the Book.

"A work which no lover of Scott and the Scott country can afford to miss. It is the best Scott book of recent years."—The Scots Pictorial.

"It is pleasant to go with so cultivated and enthusiastic a guide on a sentimental pilgrimage through the Scott country."—The Speaker.

"Visitors to the Scott country will find in this volume the very kind of guide-book they want."—Daily News.

"Mr. Crockett has done his work with a loving care and a thoroughness that are truly admirable, and his book will be warmly welcomed as a most useful addition to the existing mass of Scott literature."—Nottingham Guardian.

"The tourist could wish for no more charming memorial."—Glasgow Herald.

"Will doubtless for many a day be the standard work on the Border."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Published by A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS

The Authentic Editions of Scott are Published Solely by A. & C. Black, who purchased, along with the copyright, the interleaved set of the Waverley Novels in which Sir Walter Scott noted corrections and improvements almost up to the day of his death. All the recent editions published by A. & C. Black have been collated word for word with this set, and many inaccuracies, some of them ludicrous, corrected.

THE DRYBURGH EDITION.

In 25 Volumes, large crown 8vo, each containing a Photogravure Frontispiece and 8 page Woodcuts, bound in buckram.

PRICES.—Sets ... £4 7 6
Volumes 0 3 6

THE STANDARD EDITION.

In 25 Volumes, crown 8vo, bound in art canvas, gilt top, containing Photogravure Frontispieces.

PRICES.—Sets ... £3 2 6
Volumes 0 2 6

THE ROXBURGHE EDITION.

In 4 Vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, Illustrated by about 1,600 Woodcuts and 66 Steel Engravings.

PRICES.—Sets ... £6 0 0
Volumes 0 2 6

THE CENTENARY EDITION.

In 25 Volumes, crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated by 158 Steel Plates, and containing additional copyright notes by the late David Laing, LL.D.

PRICES.—Sets ... £4 7 6
Volumes 0 3 6

THE TWO-SHILLING EDITION.

In 25 Volumes, crown 8vo, bound in cloth, Illustrated with Woodcut Frontispieces and Vignettes and a Steel Portrait of Scott by Raeburn.

PRICES.—Sets ... £2 10 0
Volumes 0 2 0

THE VICTORIA EDITION.

In 25 Volumes, crown 8vo, cloth, each containing Frontispiece, Glossary, and Index.

PRICES.—Sets ... £1 17 6
Volumes 0 1 6

THE NEW POCKET EDITION.

In 25 Volumes, 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ x 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ in., printed on thin paper, each volume containing a Photogravure Frontispiece.

PRICES.—Sets ... £2 10 0
Volumes 0 2 0

THE SIXPENNY EDITION.

In 25 volumes, demy 8vo, double cols., sewed. Recollated from the Original Copyright Material, each Novel supplied with a Special Glossary.

PRICES.—Sets ... £0 12 6
Volumes 0 0 6

Scott's Poetical Works, Tales of a Grandfather, and Life by Lockhart, are to be had uniform with most of above in style, price, and binding.

An Illustrated Catalogue of Scott's Works post free on application.

Published by A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 014 527 584 2